The Father waits to hear our prayer-A prayer of thanks that we are free From this dark gloom that shadows o'er Our sunny South like Upas tree, Whose poison kills, then sighs for more— A prayer, that in this golden West, Our homes are more than doubly blest.

But while to Him our thanks arise,
For home and love and native land,
We lend our ears to catch the sighs
From far off homes where death's cold

Touches, and leaves its cruel trace On many leved one's form and face. And while these means and pitious cries
Come floating on and bursting forth,
Let prayers go upward to the skies,
From every household in the North,
For every sore and stricken heart,
Lets pray for each and give our part.

LENA MORTON'S CHOICE. Or That Trip to the Peaks of Otter. "Are you going with the party to the Peaks of Otter, to-morrow, Miss Lena ?" Harvy Tremont said, as he leaned over the pailings of the flower garden glistening with early dew, in which Lena Morton was tying up vines and trimming shrubbery, and looking bewitchingly pretty under her broad garden hat. She knew that he had come thus early in the hope of engaging her to go with him to this same party, and she was sure he meant to tell her, what, she knew well enough, that she was dearer to him than any one heart's fondest wish that she would now energy stripped of his with air, false and so on.

and the little cottage home he had just built on his modest farm. Yet, and reached Lena just in time to knowing this and liking Harvy extremely well, she yet took a pleasure (paparently very naive and innocent) "Why certainly I am going. Mr. Guy Lambert was here last night to offer me a seat in that splendid new phaeton of his, behind splendid new phaeton of his, behind the dashing bays. I shall have a glorious ride."

The young man tried to reflect her delighted look and failed miserably. He was really pained. Lena knew he had intended to ask her to go with him, why then, did she accept Guy's offer? She had seemed to favor his suit, and yet, here she look and eatching a twig near by, raised to favor his suit, and yet, here she look and so near the top that friendly hands joined her and brought her safely on the summit. How would Harry extricate himself was the next question. The rock he was standing on was fast giving away. With a desperate effort he placed one foot in a crevice and catching a twig near by, raised to favor his suit, and yet, here she look and so near the top that friendly hands joined her and brought her safely on the summit. All these blessed privileges were denied her.

Poor Eve! she's dead now.

And the fashion she inaugurated is dead, also.
